

Introducing an Italian restaurant where you can enjoy red gold tomatoes!

Tomato processing begins with the sorting of the best tomatoes that are washed to eliminate any traces of earth or other unwanted materials. Then the most suitable fruit are sorted with the perfectly ripe and whole fruit chosen for processing. Next, the fruit is brought to a high temperature to separate the skin from the flesh, and then an optic sorter eliminates any damaged fruit, the stems and traces of skin. At this point in the production line, the tin cans are filled with the whole peeled tomatoes and their juice, and are vacuum-sealed to preserve their freshness and flavour. The next phase in the operation is sterilisation, which eliminates any micro-organisms that could alter the product. At the end of processing, the canned whole peeled tomatoes are ready for the final metres of the conveyor belt for labelling and packing in cartons.

The red gold tomatoes made in this way are exported all over the world, so we can enjoy delicious and varied menus not only at home, but also at restaurants. Today, we introduce an Italian restaurant in Seoul where you can enjoy a variety of tomato-based dishes. The list of Italian restaurants is based on '2021 Korea's Leading Dining Trends Diary R Restaurant Guide Seoul part'.

Red Gold from Europe is the slogan of a campaign managed by ANICAV - the Italian Association of Canned Vegetable Industries - and co-financed by the European Commission promoting preserved (canned) tomatoes in Korea.

ANICAV, established in 1945, is the largest representative association of vegetable-canning companies in the world with 90 members (of which 73 in tomato-processing). ANICAV members account for over 60% of all the processed tomatoes in Italy, and nearly all the whole peeled tomatoes produced in the world. Moreover, 15 members produce PDO San Marzano preserved tomato products (circa 80% of the companies belonging to the applicable Consortium).
